The Granada Museum of Fine Arts was first opened in 1909 with a small collection of religious wooden sculptures from three monasteries during the Reconquista era. This original collection was expanded with new acquisitions and donations. In 1954, two years passed since the original donation. The museum's collection includes works from the 15th to the 18th century, with a particular focus on the works of the 16th and 17th century. Since it was not opened to the public during this period, it has been closed to the public until the 19th century. The museum also includes works from the 19th and 20th centuries, as well as a significant collection of modern and contemporary art.

During the 20th century, the collection was expanded with new acquisitions and donations. In 1954, two years passed since the original donation. The museum's collection includes works from the 15th to the 18th century, with a particular focus on the works of the 16th and 17th century. Since it was not opened to the public during this period, it has been closed to the public until the 19th century. The museum also includes works from the 19th and 20th centuries, as well as a significant collection of modern and contemporary art.

Following the latest renovation, the museum's exhibition has been divided into thematic sections, one of which is devoted to the 15th century of art, and the other to the 16th century. This division allows visitors to explore the different periods and styles of art in detail.

The section on the 15th century includes a significant collection of works from the period, including paintings, sculptures, and textiles. The section on the 16th century highlights the transition from the Gothic to the Renaissance style, with works from artists such as El Greco and Velázquez.

The museum's collection also includes important works from the 17th century, such as the paintings of Caravaggio and the sculptures of Bernini. These works provide insight into the artistic movements and styles of the time.

The museum's permanent collection also includes works from the 18th century, including paintings by artists such as Goya and Murillo. These works highlight the influence of the Baroque style on Spanish art.

The museum also includes a significant collection of modern and contemporary art, with works by artists such as Pablo Picasso and Joan Miró. These works provide a glimpse into the artistic trends of the 20th century and beyond.

The museum is open to the public from Monday to Sunday, with entrance fees varying depending on the day and time of visit. Visitors are encouraged to check the museum's website for the most up-to-date information on hours and fees.
Dear visitor:
For news, the Andalusian Ministry of Culture and Sport has established a website at www.museandalas.com. The website includes all the usual features of a modern website and is a tool for increasing the public interest and understanding of Andalusi culture. It is open to the public in both languages.
